As a state fair drawing card, Railroad Magnate Harriman was a sore disappointment.

Umbrellas are said to be coming into fashion again. Any color or texture, so long as it's an umbrella, is allowable.

Saturday's fire in a Montpelier millinery establishment was, like the women, "after the styles." And it got them, pattern and all.

The national Democrats having got rid of Haskell as campaign treasurer have intensified the riddance by selecting Riddick for the place.

The state fair got through without being drenched, but it looks rather black ahead for the only "world's fair" at Tunbridge this week.

The first word from Lieu Peary "all going well," in his search for the North Pole; but not the last by any means. Peary believes in advertising.

Now is a good time to take a mental picture of Northfield when everybody over there is "looking pleasant" about a large granite contract which means a boom to business.

There was one occasion when Judge Tyler's injunction was powerless, and that was to restrain the horse which kicked him out of the wagon and ran away at Brattleboro the other day.

When the government gets those cemeteries on the Burlington post-office, it might send down a few men and lay a stone or two on Barre's post-office-to-be. That would be an earnest of Uncle Sam's good intentions with us.

The elective term boomers for United States Senator Stewart of Middlebury have completely surrendered to the Page phalanx, it seems. We no longer hear a word from them, nor even a mild expression of Senator Stewart's own desire for the place.

A clergyman who wrote to the Brattleboro Reformer for a boost toward the chaplaincy of the Vermont House got a very curt reply, which said, among other things, that "we have no patience with the methods of those who are actively campaigning for the place." That seems to voice a general sentiment.

There is no simplified spelling in this characterization of President Roosevelt, a "flagrant falsifier, a ward politician and a four-flusher" by E. D. Cameron at the head of Oklahoma's educational system. They constitute a rather undignified trio to connect with the highest office in the United States, but, whether true or not, they are only what might be expected when the holder of the office

Did you ever notice how conspicuous are the feet of a tall man?

Of course one reason is they are larger—but they often seem bigger than is really necessary.

Now we make a special point of the right shoes for big men. Shoes that look right, feel right and are right because they're made on special lines.

rushes into a campaign embroglio which is waxing more dirty with every day that is left before the national election. Someone ought to whisper in Roosevelt's ear.

Of course, it is none of the public's business if Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., does go to work; but the public has sort of a snooping curiosity to know if the president's son makes good, which may be pardoned, inasmuch as the youngster has been thrust into public view so much. So Teddy, Jr., may as well realize that he is being watched as few young men are being watched as they start out in business.

AN OFFICE AFTER THE MAN.

The indications are that Judge George M. Bingham of Manchester, N. H., will accept the Democratic nomination for governor of New Hampshire. The state convention which last week nominated him in spite of his repeated request that his name be not considered decided as a final precautionary measure to send a delegation to interview Judge Bingham, and, of course, to have a heart to heart talk over the situation. This belief that the nominee will not refuse to run for the place is based on what must be his conception of the conditions. The Democratic party in New Hampshire will be stranded, high and dry, if he should at this late hour stand by his oft-repeated assertion that he did not want to run, for with the convention a week past and the thoughts of the party focused on him and perhaps united toward no voice, there would be small chance for party success if the Democrats should finally select another candidate. It hardly seems likely that a man with any strain of party loyalty would thus leave that party in the lurch at a critical period such as this. The natural course for Judge Bingham to do will be to accept the honor, having also a deep regard for the confidence reposed in him by his party men, for it certainly is a very strong evidence of confidence for the Democratic convention to tender him a unanimous nomination after his persistent refusals. Judge Bingham is very likely to be the man who will make the Republican candidate, Quinby, with his railroad leanings, lustre for the election.

CURRENT COMMENT.

The University's Gratifying Outlook.

The college year at the university of Vermont opened yesterday under the most favorable auspices, and the outlook could not be more satisfactory. President Buckham expressed his gratification over the fact that in spite of the raising of the requirements for admission there had been no falling off in the entering class, which is even larger than that of last year. It would be a difficult matter to find an address by a college president showing a finer appreciation of the fitness of things as between faculty and student body than that made at the opening exercises by President Buckham yesterday. President Buckham has a happy faculty of always saying the right thing at the right time in the right way, and this was never truer than of the address in question.

It is the special province of the university to fit men and women for the activities and duties of life. Difficulties are among the chief features of existence, and President Buckham in emphasizing the desirability of learning to glory in the overcoming of difficulties in college, furnished lessons which can be profitably studied by men and women in every walk of life. His address is printed in full in another column, and we are sure it will have the wide perusal of its many merits deserve.

In this connection we are glad to speak of the happy relations existing between the university of Vermont and the city of its location. In some college towns there is constant friction between students and residents or between "town and gown" as the phrase is.

Burlington people are proud of the university, of its officers and faculty and of its work. We glory in its enviable record and the splendid service in citizenship and very good cause of the men and women it has fitted for life's work.

The modern university, unlike the college of old, begins the preparation of youth for manhood and womanhood by treating students as men and women. The modern student enjoys a degree of personal liberty which would have shocked and even horrified the authorities of the typical college of a few decades ago, and it is for students to show by being men and women that they are deserving of the trust reposed in them by both faculty and parents.—Burlington Free Press.
